Even leaving aside the national ABM program, just the Washington ABM emplacement will cost more than an entire year of the D.C. budget. That money will be spent in ways that are positively dangerous to our city and country, not for meeting the real needs of Washington. If the City Council seriously represented the people of D.C., it would be demanding that every dime of that money be spent on the needs of Washington. That is the jurisdiction it has, and pretending that it doesn't is just political cowardice.
